

very, sorry," said the Colonel, "for he was killed. By the bye, that is a very pretty gun you've got. You be so kind as to let me look at it."
The soldier complied with the request. The Colonel took the gun, stepped back a few feet, took deliberate aim, then broke forth in a tirade of abuse, concluding with an order to drop down and take a bite of the crow, or he would play his brains out. The soldier explained, apologized, and entreated. It was of no use.

There was no help for it—and the suffering soldier stooped and took a bite of the snow to swallow it he could not. Up came the first—his dinner the day before, and it finally appeared as if he would throw up his contents. "The Englishman" gloated on the misery of his victim, and smiled complacently at every additional flare: "When he has got through vomiting, and had wiped his eyes, the Colonel handed him his gun, with the remark, 'Now, I will reveal that will teach you how to poach like a gentleman's enclosure.'" solomon might have seen the devil in his eyes he had looked close. Stepping back he took a step in at the heart of his habit and ordered him to continue to finish the crowd. Angry exposures, imitations, prayers, and entreaties were useless. There was shot in the American eye before he knew, as there had been in the English eye before. There was no help at hand, and he fell. He took a bite of the crowd. One bite was enough to send all the good dinners he had eaten lately on the same journey with the Garrisonian are of the soldier, and while the Englishman was in the agony of sickness, Jonathan

"The next morning, early, the commandant of Fort Niagara was sitting in his quarters when Colonel — was announced.

"Sir," said Colonel —, "I come to deliver the punishment of one of your men, who yesterday entered my premises and committed a great outrage."

"We have three hundred men here, and it could be difficult for me to know who it is you mean," said the officer.

The Englishman described him as a long, ungulating, stuttering, stoop shouldered devil."

"Ah! I know whom you mean," said the officer; "he is always getting into some mischief. Orderly, call Tom."

In a few moments Tom entered and stood straight as his natural build would allow. While not a trace of emotion was visible on his countenance.

"Tom," said his officer, "do you know this gentleman?"

"Ye-ye-ye es, sir."

"Where did you see him before?"

"I-I-I-I," said Tom, stammering awfully at retaining the grave expression natural to face ]

"I did-did-dine with him yesterday."
We believe Tom was not punished. —Indianapolis Sentinel.

As the employees mostly met their fate from accidents incidental to their profession, chief among them coupling cars. The 'others' were almost always trespassing on the tracks of various common carriers. Thus one passenger was killed for every 1,039,900 miles travelled, and one employee for every 1,039,900 miles travelled, but one employee killed for every 8,275,209 miles travelled. In view of this it really does seem as if it were almost as safe to travel by railway as it is to set by one's fire, for, as the chances are for a man to be killed while travelling at least half the 8,275,209 miles travelled without being hurt, he might go 1,187,600 the latter, 12 weeks—which would leave him 144 hours, 12 weeks 1 day, and several odd hours—and attempts to do, if he travelled without stopping for business, all night and all day, 1 week day and Sunday's—before there would be a very great probability of his being hurt through a slip of the train with safety. The fact that this is at least gratifying to those of us who have to travel much, and the knowledge that it will come to the establishment and labours of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

THE ADINGTON ROAD.—A late visitor to the Adlington Crematorium Road described

The country is filling rapidly, and the settlers are doing well. Of the free lots, 178 have been taken up, 1,600 acres of land cleared and sown in wheat, and of the lands for sale in the rear of the settled, 22,000 acres have been disposed of by the Government, with the condition of actual settlement. There are four mills and several saw mills have been erected, besides school-houses, stores, blacksmith shops and taverns. The soil is generally rich and fertile. The climate healthy, the country is well watered by lakes and rivers abounding in fish, and the woods are full of game. Coal, lead, iron, and other minerals have been discovered.

been discovered. The Addington road is now extended to the Madawaska, and is now extended east, to open up a communication with Kennebec; and is about to be extended to intersect the Opeongo road. Persons intending to settle, or who desire to observe the progress of what appears to be a very successful experiment, should proceed by the Grand Central Railway to Nanpate, from whence a good macadamized road leads to the settlement. Why should Canadians emigrate who can find land on a free road, within easy access to civilization, can be obtained at a very small expense of supplying an axe!

of The Globe's London Correspondent gives a full account of the wreck of the Boat Charter which perished in the Moat Street on the night of the 23rd ult. The ship itself was worth £70 000, she had £230 000 in Gold, besides a general cargo on the saddest list of all was, there were 170 persons on board, of whom only 42 escaped with their lives. The storm was one of unequalled in its fury, and the disasters have been numerous and distressing.

spied them," are being introduced into the country from abroad. Instead of feathers, they are covered with hair like that of the lap dog, very white, soft and beautiful, and have various red ornaments on their heads. Wheeling Intelligencer, of a late date, describes a couple which had been brought off track on the road to Pittsburg, for some hunter who had imported them.
